

The European heritage label

European Heritage sites are milestones in the creation of today's Europe, they celebrate and symbolise European ideals, values, history and integration.

Candidate sites for the European Heritage Label will have to demonstrate in their application :

- their intrinsic European values (like equality and freedom)
- the role they played in European culture and history and/or the build-up of the Union

Why is European heritage important?

European Heritage helps us understand the history, culture, and traditions of different European countries. Monuments, museums, and historical sites preserve important memories and teach future generations about the past. Heritage also brings people together through culture, tourism, and education. By protecting these places, Europe celebrates its diversity while strengthening unity and values.

France Day 4

European Patrimony

Euroclass was preparing to present European heritage orally. Each student had prepared a report on an iconic monument, highlighting its history and architecture. One spoke of the European Parliament, while another discussed the majesty of the Alhambra, and others about Way of Saint James. The excitement was palpable. In the end, we praised their work, emphasizing learning about European history.
